Gerhard Werle, Professor of International Criminal Law, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, and Florian Jeßberger, Professor of Criminal Law, University of Hamburg

- Provides a comprehensive understanding of the foundations of international criminal law and the core crimes it governs
- Offers an accessible overview for both students, legal practitioners, and judges working on cases concerning crimes, both at the international and domestic levels
- Builds on the previous editions' philosophical and normative analysis of international criminal justice, and discusses new developments in the field, including recent case law from the International Criminal Court
